Canada's forests span more than 347 million hectares — nearly 9% of the world's forest area — and remain central to the country's environmental resilience, economic strength, and cultural identity. As climate pressures intensify and global demand for sustainable materials grows, National Forest Week 2026 offers an opportunity to explore how the sector is evolving. This special feature will highlight how governments, Indigenous partners, researchers, and industry leaders are advancing responsible forest management, strengthening wildfire preparedness, supporting biodiversity, and positioning Canada's forests as a cornerstone of climate and economic strategy.

Proposed topic highlights:

Climate resilience and wildfire adaptation: How forest management practices, prevention strategies, and community planning are evolving in response to longer and more severe wildfire seasons.

Indigenous stewardship and co-management: Expanding Indigenous leadership, partnerships, and economic participation in forest governance and land management.

Nature-based climate solutions and carbon markets: The growing role of forests in carbon sequestration, corporate net-zero strategies, and climate reporting frameworks.

Technology and data-driven forestry: Applications of remote sensing, AI, and advanced analytics to improve monitoring, planning, and sustainable resource use.

The forest bioeconomy and sustainable materials: Innovation in mass timber, biomaterials, and low-carbon products supporting economic growth and decarbonization.
