As organizations navigate economic uncertainty, capital discipline, evolving workforce expectations, and rising sustainability requirements, commercial real estate is playing an increasingly strategic role in enterprise performance. From office portfolios to industrial hubs, companies are reassessing how space supports productivity, talent attraction, resilience, and long-term value creation. Developed in partnership with the CoreNet Global Canadian Chapter and timed to align with The 2026 CoreNet Global Summit, North America, this special feature will explore how forward-looking organizations are planning, optimizing, and managing commercial real estate to align with modern business priorities across Canada and beyond.

Proposed topic highlights:

- Strategic Portfolio Optimization: Aligning real estate footprints with capital allocation, utilization targets, and long-term business strategy.
- Workplace Performance: Designing environments that support productivity, collaboration, and employee experience in hybrid operating models.
- Sustainability and Decarbonization: Advancing energy efficiency, electrification, and carbon reduction within corporate portfolios.
- Industrial and Supply-Chain Strategy: Expanding and repositioning logistics and manufacturing space in response to nearshoring and distribution demands.
- Urban Market Repositioning: Revitalizing and adapting commercial assets within major city cores and emerging growth regions.
- Technology and Data Integration: Applying analytics, AI, and smart-building systems to improve asset performance and decision-making.
