Artificial intelligence is moving rapidly from experimentation into everyday use across business, healthcare, government, education and industry. As adoption grows, attention is turning to how organizations can deploy AI effectively, build the infrastructure and skills needed to support it, and translate Canadian research into globally competitive products and companies. This special feature will explore the technologies, applications and ideas shaping the next phase of artificial intelligence in Canada.

Proposed topic highlights:

AI in action — How organizations are moving from pilots to practical applications that improve productivity, services and decision-making.

Canada's AI advantage — How research excellence, entrepreneurship and commercialization are helping Canadian companies compete globally.

Compute and infrastructure — Why data centres, cloud capacity, chips and sovereign computing resources are becoming foundational to the AI economy.

AI and the workforce — How new tools are changing jobs, skills and the way people work across industries.

Trust and responsible deployment — How privacy, transparency, security and governance are shaping the adoption of AI.

The next generation of AI — Emerging advances in agents, robotics, multimodal systems and other technologies expanding what AI can do.
